

Jennifer Mayo

Jennifer Mayo is graduate student of Oklahoma State University studying Entrepreneurship. Her undergraduate degree at Oklahoma State University is in Health Education and Promotion/Community Health. She is currently working at the Regional Food Bank of Oklahoma as the Agency Capacity Building Coordinator. Mayo is the owner of Pearl Health, a social venture to develop a new material for condoms that will be better suited for developing countries. Jennifer is a fellow of the Riata Center for Entrepreneurship at Oklahoma State University and University Innovation Fellows at Stanford University and Venture Well. Her project as a Riata fellow included the development of the Pearl Health business. Her achievements also include speaking at TEDx in 2013 promoting reusable condoms. Jennifer has spent one year in India and two months in Ghana, Africa. While there she taught about loan groups, developed health education material and did preliminary work for a girls' recovery home.