Grand W&C w Foyer

Dr. Tiago de Jesus, Research Associate Infrastructure Resilience Research Group Faculty of Engineering and Design,

Carleton University

A growing challenge for urban planners, managers and decisionmakers is to ensure that cities are resilient against cyberattacks. A unique feature of urban centres is its dependence on a multitude of vital services. From public transportation to emergency services, to water and wastewater management, cities depend on critical services to operate normally. In this workshop, participants will discover the vulnerabilities that can expose cities to cyber risks that can cause the functional breakdown of urban centres. This session will provide a strategic understanding of the cyber threats, risks and vulnerabilities that can impact the operation of cities.
