DC 2014
13TH INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM ON DENDRITIC CELLS

TOURS, LOIRE VALLEY, FRANCE
SEPTEMBER 14 - 18, 2014

dc-2014.com
Dear Sponsors and Exhibitors/Colleagues,

On behalf of the International DC Vaccine Society, I am pleased and honored to announce that the 13th International Symposium on Dendritic Cells in fundamental and clinical immunology will be held in Tours (Loire Valley) France, from September 14th to 18th, 2014.

The International Symposium on Dendritic Cells is organized every two years in a different country by a panel of scientists selected by the DC Vaccine Society. This conference aims to bring together the international scientific community of researchers in dendritic cells and enable communications and scientific exchanges at the highest level.

Together with you, we will make this congress a high-level scientific event that will be of great value to all. The Scientific Organizing Committee is preparing an inspiring program that will address new trends and emerging subjects in basic and clinical immunology. This conference will bring together investigators working in several scientific fields, including ontogeny, antigen processing & presentation, sensing/innate signaling, genetics, metabolism, infection, tumor immunity, autoimmunity, allergy and transplantation. All major leaders in the dendritic cells field, and working related research areas such as vaccination and immunomodulation, will meet at this international Congress. Discussion leaders are chosen based on their extensive experience and the impact of their contribution to their respective field.

Simply put, this annual meeting brings together the decision-makers in the field of immunology and immunopathology, who would benefit from knowing more about the new technologies and products that companies such as yours have to offer.

The organizers of this meeting have given particular attention to bringing together investigators that are at different stages in their career. We see this conference as an opportunity for scientific networking, the initiation of new collaborative projects and the training of the next generation of scientists. The French Society for Immunology (SFI) and the French Club of Dendritic Cells (CFCD) will help achieve a high level discussion and will actively promote the conference.

Ensuring a real partnership between our Sponsors, our Exhibitors and Academia researchers is vital to the success of this Congress. This partnership is initiated in the “Exhibition and Sponsorship” brochure and we invite your company to take advantage of this unique opportunity to make direct contact with the leaders of the Dendritic Cell field of research.

All the members of the Organizing Committee, including myself, will do our best to provide you with an outstanding scientific meeting and an unforgettable stay in the Loire Valley, France. We believe that the focus of DC2014 in fundamental and clinical immunology will be highly beneficial, educational and can lead to unique insights into the mechanisms of the immune system.

We look forward to welcoming you as a major partner on this event and to making this Congress a success for all involved. We hope to see you in Tours in September 2014!
Dendritic cell biology and immunomodulation have entered a novel era. After years of accumulating discoveries and proofs of concept, the field is now sufficiently ripe to yield true therapeutic applications. However as for all scientific processes, the road is long and the community still needs a comprehensive map of the biological processes governing dendritic cell function during inflammation, infection, or tumor development to transform the legacy of the late Ralph Steinman into truly productive clinical breakthroughs. By organizing DC2014, we aim at bringing the community together and identify basic principles that direct immune responses and could facilitate the development of innovative therapeutic solutions.

Philippe Pierre
Centre d’Immunologie Marseille-Luminy, DC2014 Scientific organizing committee, France
SEBASTIAN AMIGORENA
Sebastian Amigorena obtained his PhD in Paris in 1990. After a 3 years post doc at Yale University, he returned to Paris in 1995 and started an Inserm AVENIR group together with Christian Bonnerot. Today, he is the head of the Immunology Department (Institut Curie / INSERM U932, “Immunity and Cancer”) at Institut Curie. Sebastian Amigorena’s main scientific interest overlaps immunology and cell biology. In his graduate and post-doctoral studies, he analyzed the functions of IgG receptors and described the molecular basis of their inhibitory properties. He made several contributions to our understanding of antigen presentation and cross presentation in dendritic cells. He analyzed dendritic cells’ endocytic pathway and described several unique specializations of their phagocytic pathway, including the regulation of phagosome acidification, antigen export to the cytosol and the interactions of phagosomes with the Endoplasmic Reticulum. Sebastian Amigorena used 2-photon intravital microscopy to analyzed cytotoxic T cells dynamics during the initiation of immune responses in lymph nodes and during the invasion and rejection of solid tumors. He also investigated the role of regulatory T cells in the control of the avidity of primary CD8+ T cell responses and in the development of memory T cells during infection.

MATTTHW ALBERT
Pr Matthew Albert, MD-PhD is Director of a mixed Research INSERM unit and Head of the Laboratory of Dendritic Cell Immunobiology at the Institut Pasteur, Paris, leading a team in the area of dendritic cell immunobiology and tumor immunity. He is currently heading the Immunology Department and the Center of Human Immunology at Institut Pasteur. He graduated from Brown University, Providence, RI, USA in 1992 with a B.Sc in Chemistry, followed by a Ph.D in Immunology from The Rockefeller University, New York, USA, in 1999 and M.D. in Medicine from Cornell University Medical College, New York, USA, in 2000. His laboratory has a strong interest in both the fundamental aspects of antigen cross-priming as well as advancing efforts to define mechanisms of effective tumor immunity; and the immune pathogenesis of hepatitis C infection.

JACQUES BANCHEREAU
Jacques Banchereau, PhD, was until August 2012, the Head of the Inflammation and the Virology Discovery and Translational Areas (DTA) and Nutley site Chief Scientific Officer for Hoffmann-La Roche Inc. (Roche). In this role, he oversaw discovery research and early development up to Phase IIb in the field of Inflammation, including autoimmune and respiratory diseases and in Virology, including hepatitis, influenza and other infectious diseases. Jacques Banchereau joined Roche in 2010 from the Baylor Institute for Immunology Research (BIR) in Dallas, Texas, which he founded in 1996 and directed until 2010. BIR was designed to study patients suffering from diseases that involve the immune system. During his 14 years tenure, Jacques orchestrated the Institute’s growth, building a broad human immunology research portfolio by applying a multi-disciplinary approach and actively securing large grants to fund research activities. As a result of 30 years experience in discovery and translational science, in industry and academia, Jacques has lead a broad range of programs in immunological research encompassing a vast array of clinical conditions triggered by immunological anomalies and mechanisms. He is inventor or co-inventor on numerous patents and the author/co-author of more than 400 publications, which have altogether been cited more than 55,000 times. Jacques has trained many graduate students and postdoctoral fellows.
Philippe Pierre
Dr. Philippe Pierre directs the Dendritic Cell Biology Laboratory at the Centre d’Immunologie de Marseille-Luminy (CIML). Research interests include control of translation and stress response in dendritic cell function, regulation of MHC class I and II traffic for antigen presentation by dendritic cells, dendritic cell specific endosomal proteins, and pathogens impact on dendritic cell function. He received his Ph.D. in 1994 from the EMBL (Heidelberg) and University of Geneva and held a postdoctoral fellowship and associate research scientist position at Yale University School of Medicine, USA from 1994 to 1999. He joined CIML as a Group Leader in 2000 and held the title of Associate Director from 2006 to 2008. Main achievements include the demonstration of the redistribution of MHC class II molecules from endosomes to the cell surface upon stimulation of DCs and of the role of proteases during this process. In addition he demonstrated the aggregation of ubiquitinated mistranslated products in DALIS, the role of translation quality and autophagy for antigen presentation during DC activation by microbes. He unraveled the existence of novel regulation mechanisms for cytokine production, such as microRNAs-155 and phosphatase 1 regulatory subunit GADD34. He also invented «SUnSET», a novel method for non radioactive protein synthesis monitoring in cells and tissues.

Laurence Zitvogel
Dr. Laurence Zitvogel is Research Director at Institut National de la Santé et Recherche Médicale and Co-Director of a Center of Clinical Investigations at Institut Gustave Roussy, Villejuif, France. She graduated in 1992 with a degree in Medical Oncology from the School of Medicine of the University of Paris, France. She began her scientific career at the University of Pittsburgh, USA working under Michael Lotze. Her expertise is mainly dendritic cell and innate effector biology and relevance during tumor development and immunotherapy of cancer. She currently investigates the immunogenicity of cell death with drugs of the oncological armamentarium and conduct a Phase II trial using DC-derived autologous exosome-vaccines.
