

Safer Internet Forum 2019

From online violence to digital respect

For two decades, the European Union has played an important role in promoting a safer and better internet through a range of legal measures, funding programmes and self-regulatory initiatives. With a new Digital Europe programme being shaped, the Safer Internet Forum (SIF) 2019 will celebrate 20 years of safer/better internet funding, while identifying some of the key European challenges and opportunities which lie ahead.

This year's edition of the Safer Internet Forum will explore digital respect as an antidote to online violence in various forms. The #DigitalRespect4Her campaign, launched by the European Commission earlier in 2019, highlights the challenges for girls and young women, especially, and an inclusive and respectful online culture for all EU citizens is a European Commission priority. Children and young people, in particular, should feel safe and respected online; equally, they should feel able and empowered to be active public participants in digital life.

Against this background, Thordis Elva will deliver the keynote presentation, disentangling the complex problem of online violence. There will be opportunities to hear the perspectives of different stakeholders including youth, teachers and parents, with a number of hands-on "deep dive" sessions also. Forum participants will learn from those working to combat digital violence, as well as those individuals who have been affected by it but who fought back to bring about change. This is a societal problem which is facilitated by technology but, ultimately, it is about behaviour and hence everyone has a role to play in combatting it.

Also as part of SIF 2019, INHOPE (the International Association of Internet Hotlines) will host an INHOPE@20 session and a close-of-Forum reception to celebrate its 20 years of existence.

will attend the INHOPE@20 session (DD6) for the duration of this agenda segment (13.45 until 16.15).

An indication of the focus of the various sessions is given below.

Focus	Description
DD1: Online sexual violence and misogyny in gaming	Many reports suggest that women and girls are marginalised and sexualised in gaming culture. This session will consider some of the complex issues around gender bias in gaming and the challenges that women and girls face in these environments, as well as discussing some possible solutions. Session leader: Lavinia McLean, Head of the Department of Humanities, Technological University Dublin
DD2: Sexual violence against men and boys	Research suggests that online sexual harassment takes place in a gendered context and is deeply rooted in structural relationships of inequality between men and women. This in turn produces disproportionately negative outcomes for women and girls. However, despite the fact that women and girls are more likely to be targeted with online sexual harassment, it is still a significant problem for boys and men. This session will consider what we know about the scale of the problem, why it is so under-reported, and strategies to address this. Session leader: Nick Dunne, Psychosexual Therapist, Brook
DD3: Online sexual harassment (deSHAME)	Project deSHAME (Digital Exploitation and Sexual Harassment Among Minors in Europe) aims to increase reporting of online sexual harassment among young people, and improve multi-sector cooperation in preventing and responding to this behaviour. Session participants will hear more about the project and use some of the resources that have been created. Session leader: Maithreyi Rajeshkumar, Policy and Communications Manager, Childnet
DD4: Online hate (SELMA)	Online hate speech is a growing problem. Education is part of the solution in order to encourage digital respect. The SELMA (Social and Emotional Learning for Mutual Awareness) project builds upon a social and emotional learning (SEL) approach to empower young people to become agents of change. It helps them to better understand the phenomenon of online hate, and provides them with tools and strategies to act and make a difference. This workshop will allow participants to engage with some of the materials prepared as part of the project, and gain a more in-depth understanding of the approaches used. Session leaders: Ken Corish, Online Safety Director, South West Grid for Learning (SWGfL) (UK); Stefanie Fächner, Media Education Consultant,

	German Awareness Centre (DE); Niels-Christian Bilenberg, Helpline Coordinator, Cyberhus (DK)
DD5: Using AI as a solution	This session will showcase two different applications of AI (artificial intelligence) to encourage digital respect and to prevent/disrupt child sexual abuse online. Led by industry stakeholders, this session will explore new social media tools aimed at helping users who may be about to make a comment that could be offensive, and age-verification tools which are being used and developed to safeguard children and young people from inappropriate communications with adults. Session leaders: Julie Dawson, Director of Regulatory &amp; Policy, Yoti and Milan Zubicek, Government Affairs and Public Policy Manager, Google
DD6: INHOPE@20: The impact of a global network in combatting online child sexual abuse material	This session is a celebration of the INHOPE network and a review of what has been achieved over the past 20 years in combatting illegal online content and, specifically, child sexual abuse material (CSAM). With contributions from long-standing INHOPE hotlines, EC representatives, industry stakeholders and child-welfare professionals, the session will reflect on the challenges and achievements over the past 20 years. This will include discussing the lessons that have been learned and how we have used those to shape future activities under the heading of "Back to the Future". The session will also set out the vision for the INHOPE network into the future as it faces the constantly evolving challenges in finding and removing CSAM from the internet. Session leaders: Denton Howard, Executive Director, INHOPE and Fred Langford, President, INHOPE
