Biography

William Horin is a partner in the Winston & Strawn Washington, D.C. office and concentrates his practice in the area of nuclear energy regulation.

Bill represents nuclear utility applicants and licensees, trade associations, and others before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. He counsels clients with respect to NRC enforcement matters (including all aspects of plant operation and radioactive materials transportation), requests for license amendments (related to, among other topics, construction permit period recapture and power level upgrades), and new plant and fuel repository licensing.

Bill represents utility and utility group clients with regard to significant administrative rulemakings, including decommissioning (focusing on legal and financial implications of NRC and IRS regulations), license renewal, licensing and design basis, deregulation issues, equipment qualification, and power reactor nuclear insurance (liability and property). Bill serves as counsel to the Nuclear Utility Group on Equipment Qualification. He also represents nuclear vendors and manufacturers. He has counseled foreign nuclear power utilities and financial institutions regarding matters related to the nuclear and electric power industries. Bill is actively involved in nuclear industry generic efforts, including participation in several Nuclear Energy Institute task forces and industry initiatives
